Hi Sheila –

I came up to 14 for about a half hour this morning to get my login password changed and to check out the air. It didn't seem too bad, but my bronchial tubes were somehow already annoyed this morning, so the fact that they didn't get worse might not mean a lot. I was getting a bit headachy by the time I left, though, and I thought it was unusually warm and muggy, which suggests that they aren't running the HVAC very aggressively. It's much more comfortable here on 11, and I can actually hear the HVAC going – which I couldn't on 14.

I looked at whether I could just unplug my phone and bring it down to 11, but it seems to be plugged into both my docking station and the phone jack, so it may not be all that simple to move. I also looked at my mouse and keyboard, and besides having to undo a big bundle of wires, they would use both of my USB ports. That's not fatal, though – I could unplug something for the rare occasions when I need to use a USB drive. The big problem is that I don't have access to the F drive, which I typically access only about 20 times a day, so I really can't get more than half functional without moving the docking station. In any event, I think I'm going to have to get help to really get set up here on 11. Scott Augustine is working at home today, but I'll give him a call and see if he'll be in tomorrow.
